of the arrest at Tampico of American Educjackets.

The resolution passed the house tonight by a vote of 337 to 37 after a spirited debate. For several hours it was considered by the senate foreign relations committee with prospect of an all-night session of the senate, or a recess until early tomorrow.

The house adjourned until 11 o'clock tomorrow and President Wilson, worn out by the day's work, retired after hearing that the house had adopted the resolution.

Persons who were in touch with the president said the steps which would be taken by the United States "abort of war" were of a nature which would not require formal notification to the powers, as would a declaration of blockade or other preliminaries to war. Foreign governments will be kept informed of developments, however.

The debate in the house brought out the fact that while the American navy probably would shut Marko of from commerce with the United States, it would not interfere with the passage to and fro of foreign versels, though cargoe discharged on the shore might be held at the customs houses if they were occupied by American forces. The joint resolution passed by the house and which was hefore the d which was before the senate at te hour tonight, read as follows:

"A joint resolution justifying the employing of the armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands against Victoriano Huerta. Resolved, by the senate and house of representatives in congress assembled. solved by the senate and house of representatives in congress assembled, but the president of the United States is justified in the employment of the trued forces of the United States to suffere the demands upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the tovernment of the United States for affronts and indignities committed trainst this government by General liverta and his representatives."

A democratic member of the senate foreign relations committee at 11.40 pclock said he believed no resolution would be favorably reported which individualized Huerta, but that the measure probably would be broadened to include the "de facto government at Mexico City."

Mexico City."

Opposition had developed to such an extent to singling out Huerta in the resolution that it became virtually certain that objections would postpone During the evening there were informal conferences of democrats and republicans and opposition to the phrasecology of the resolution was apparent. Many senators among them a few democrats, objected to singling out General Hants out General Huerta as an individual and wanted to amend the resolution to direct it against the de facto government in Mexico City. Others want-ed to make the resolution broad enough to cover Mexico generally.

ed to make the resolution broad enough to cover Mexico generally.

Administration leaders were beginning to rally their forces early in anticipation of republican opposition. Administration senators held that the passage of the resolution was a step which would enable the president actually to prevent war by forcing Huerta to respect Americans and their interests.

The president made it clear to con-ress in his message that the execu-tive really had authority to act, but that he preferred the approval of con-

Washington, April 20—Prompt or-anization of a volunteer army for ervice in Mexico or in any other risis would be provided for in a house oill passed today by the senate with amendments. Sending of the measure to the conference was delayed by a motion by Senator Reed to recon-sider the vote, but senators said the notion probably would be disposed of The bill would revise the law under which a volunteer force was organ-ized for the Spanish-American was in 1898. Its author claims that a vol-unteer force could be raised more quackly than under the existing law; that it would prevent the payment of bounties, would do away with a short term of enlistment by making the term of volunteers the same as that in the regular army; would procure the necessary number of men at the beginning of the war for a long period, thus making drafting unnecessary and would decrease the pension list after the war. Unlike the present law, the bill would provide for the recruiting of all organizers of land forces. This would include training service to which duty partially disabled officers would be assigned when superseded be assigned when superseded by able-bodied men at the front, Another change in the existing law would give the president instead of he governors of the states the authority to appoint all officers for the volunteer forces, requiring him to give preference in their selection to those who have had military train-ing and instruction in the regular army, national guard, volunteer forces of military schools.

Instead of the volunteer forces waiting to be called into service until all the organized militia of all arms has been called, it would permit organization of volunteers of the organization of volunteers of a particular arm as soon as the militia of that particular arm had been put into service. Another provision is that the number and grade of officers should be the same in the vol-unteer forces as in the regular army. The present strength of the organized militia, including both officers and men, is approximately 120,000 according to the latest returns from adjutant generals of the different states to the war department.

the United States was being singled out, and might be singled out with impunity, for slights and affronts in retaliation for its refusal to recognize the pretensions of Gen. Huerta to be regarded as the constitutional provisional President of the Reublic of Mexico. "The manifest danger of such situation was that such offences might grow from bad to worse until something happened of so gross and intolerable a sort as to lead directly and inevitably to armed conflict. It was necessary that the apoligies of General Huerta and his representatives should go much further, that they should be such as to attract the attention of the whole population to their significance, and such as to important they will so to the front if needed."
